Woodfield Primary School has presented a detailed profile of evidence that demonstrates it is Embracing across all eight competencies of the School Mental Health Award. The school has used the framework and content of the Award to very good effect to develop its mental health and wellbeing strategies, structures and practices.

The school leads talk of Woodfield feeling like a family and being a happy and safe place. "We make things work and go above and beyond." The school reports that it knows and understands the children in their families, they are confident in knowing what is needed and know where to go for support and this is reflected in the trust that parents have in the school. "Understanding mental health and wellbeing underpins everything and can be attributed to a lot of our successes." During lockdown it has become increasingly apparent that the parents think highly of the staff and have sent appreciative Facebook messages and hampers of food. The school is very much a part of the community. "We are in it together."

The social and emotional needs provision is very well embedded within the school. This provision has been developed over several years having recognised that there was an unmet need. Therapeutic interventions and the opening up of nurture has enabled the school to see how they can do things differently. Staff understand about attachment. There are intense and impactful interventions where necessary. Of particular note is the impact of nature provision for a wide range of pupils including looked after children.

This has built resilience independence and improve mental health and well-being. Thrive has enabled teachers and other staff to have a greater handle on the mental health and wellbeing needs of the pupils.

The school's mental health first aider is available for staff as well as pupils. There are termly wellbeing meetings for staff to share how they are feeling and what they need. Workload reduction has been a key focus. There are clear expectations of when staff should respond to emails, there are treat Fridays and regular celebrating success events. "People join our school and don't leave. It is our work family." The SLT and 'work partners' are approachable and available to give staff support. There is in-school provision style offloading and there is an increasing ability for people to talk and not be afraid to share their concerns. Independent counselling is also available.

Leaders, including governors, are fully supportive of the mental health agenda. SLT leads by example and shares best practice in the trust. School leaders have developed a mental health and wellbeing policy and this has been shared trust level. The school was successful in becoming part of the local CAMHS trailblazers project. They are fully involved in the developing excellence plan for each school and the trust. There is a focus on healthy lives and healthy minds, including the SLT.

The School Mental Health Award framework has made the work of the school more concise in understanding the different elements that go into a whole school mental health approach. In particular, the focus on that of the wellbeing of the staff and leaders. It has helped the school "to see it from all different angles". The school was able to identify the large amount of work that had already been done, to consolidate this into one document and to identify where more work was needed.

School leaders have trained 40 to 50 ITT students within the LA on the importance of their own wellbeing and that of their pupils. Leaders have become more confident in sharing their own personal stories and feedback from people who have received the training has been extremely positive. The school arranges bespoke transitions for their children moving into secondary education. The SENCo is working with the educational psychologists at LA level. She participates in pyramid network meetings and was invited by the educational psychologist to join the LA task and finish group, linking with others in the LA to influence practice. Through this CAMHS trailblazers project, the school has a base and has carried out face-to-face consultations with parents. Working with CAMHS, giving greater understanding about the thresholds required for CAMHS involvement.

One of the school leads at Woodfield has driven the mental health agenda forward across all the schools in the MAT for more than 2 years. She has led regular meetings and has given a direction and focus for leaders in the other schools.

I have no hesitation in concurring with the self-assessment made by the school and recommend that Woodfield Primary School is awarded the Carnegie Centre of Excellence for Mental Health in Schools School Mental Health Award at Silver level.

During the verification meetings that took place with the other schools in the MAT, other school leads reported that they found the leadership of Nicky Fallon to be greatly supportive. She has used her leadership skills and knowledge to move the whole MAT forward around the area of mental health and wellbeing. I believe she should be recognised individually for the significant role that she has played.
